A BETTER FUTURE FOR ALMONDS

For us, sustainability is about creating a thriving industry that has a positive impact on the environment, local communities, and the economy. By striving towards continuous improvement, we will continue to grow an industry that's better for the planet, the economy, local communities, and our growers.

Why is sustainability important?

The Australian almond industry relies on the environment and local communities. We understand the importance of giving back to the environment and local communities that support us. As an industry we recognise that resources are precious and must be used wisely, considering long-term consequences and priorities.

Our approach

Four Pillars of Sustainability

- Almonds that Nourish: identifies the role of Australian almonds in improving diets, health, and wellbeing by providing a quality, safe, and traceable food product.
- People and Enterprise: recognises the role of people, enterprises, and communities in ensuring that the industry remains productive and profitable. This includes a commitment to creating a safe, ethical, and fair workforce, active engagement between industry bodies, growers, and processors, and pursuing opportunities to enhance the communities that support the industry.
- Planet and Resources: focuses on reducing the Australian almond industry's impact on the natural environment. This includes reducing water use, increasing biodiversity, supporting pollinator health, and improving pest management and biosecurity.
- Reducing our Impact: reflects the Australian almond industry's commitment to working towards reducing our negative impact by reducing food, farm, and processor waste and carbon emissions within the industry.
